

Kings and Queens had much more power in the middle ages than they do now. The glittery gold crown showed how important the King or Queen was.

Moats were deep wide ditches filled with water. They made it harder for enemies to break into the castle.

In battles, knights fought with swords, pointed lances and axes. They wore tough metal armour to protect their bodies.

Servants had to do lots of jobs for the rich people who lived in the castle. They looked after horses, mended armour, did the laundry but still had to sleep on the cold stone floors!
